FLOOD OF RUMORS

Tense Uneasiness Persists All
Along Reich's Major
FrontiersBy Kingsbury Smith

LONDON, Feb. 11.—(INS)—All continental Europe and the British Isles turned anxious eyes toward Nazi Germany today, seeking information as to what is happening there and what caused the flood of rumors.

Informed circles here were inclined to discount the categorical denials of unusual events issued by the Berlin Government in view of the tense uneasiness that persisted along the Reich's major frontiers.

This feeling of tension and strain was increased by indications that Chancellor Hitler is in the midst of a drive to weed out and uproot all anti-Nazi elements in the German army—long a stronghold of the old and potent Prussian aristocracy.

One reassuring development occurred, however, and this—paradoxically—was lack of further "scare reports." Although the previous reports and apprehensions persisted, up to 10.20 a. m. today (GMT) there were no new sensational advices from the seething European rumor-factory.

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT

(Copyright, 1938, by The Baltimore Sun)

An Upsetting Report

Washington, Feb. 10.

THE REPORT that Gov. Herbert Lehman intends to be a candidate for renomination this year in New York is particularly interesting for a number of reasons. If he really does run—and his friends believe he will—the somewhat premature calculations which our more advanced political seers have been making about the 1940 Democratic situation, will have to be revised.

FOR ONE THING, it would upset the political plans of the White House concerning which there has been little secret. The particular friend and adviser of the President—young Mr. Robert H. Jackson, now Solicitor General—is a practically declared aspirant with the unquestioned good wishes of Mr. Roosevelt and tentative support from certain labor leaders, though significantly not that of Mr. James A. Farley. At the time Mr. Jackson modestly let it be known that he wanted the nomination, it was assumed that despite his strong inclination, the President, in time, could bring Mr. Farley into line and that with the White House weight, Mr. Jackson could be nominated with ease, celerity and grace.

IT WAS natural that this state of affairs should stand Mr. Jackson out as a strong possibility for the Democratic Presidential nomination in 1940. The New York Governorship is recognized as the best position in which a man can be to gain that honor. With two years in Albany and Administration support no one could doubt that Mr. Jackson would be foremost among the 1940 contenders. The combination of his avowed candidacy and his White House closeness made it logical to regard him as the Roosevelt choice for his successor, and it would be strange, indeed, if Mr. Jackson had not thought of himself in that light. The road seemed to stretch reasonably clear before him.

HOWEVER, the Lehman candidacy—should it materialize—would change the whole situation and certainly dim the bright visions which have been dancing before the Jacksonian eyes. For one thing, if Governor Lehman decides to go after it, there is not much doubt about his getting the nomination, and that, of course, automatically, would eliminate Mr. Jackson from the national picture. Mr. Roosevelt in a position of acute personal embarrassment—because he does not now like Governor Lehman, nor want him to continue in public life.

YET, if he should be nominated, he would be compelled to support him—first, because he would be the Democratic nominee and, second, because he is under recognized political obligation to him. Most people will recall the extraordinary efforts made by Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Farley to induce Governor Lehman to rescind his decision not to be a candidate that year. At that time—just before the Philadelphia convention—the New Dealers were not nearly as confident as they later became. They were afraid of losing New York and felt that the Lehman candidacy was vital. The heaviest kind of pressure was applied to Governor Lehman to run again. It culminated in his being taken by the President to Hyde Park and there personally appealed to in a way no man could resist.

AS IT turned out, of course, the President would have carried New York if Governor Lehman had re-

PAUL FORSTER PRESIDES

Thirty-nine of the 42 members of the Bristol Exchange Club were present at the Elks' Home last evening when the local service club acted as host to more than a score of members from the Newtown Exchange Club and several other guests, including a delegation of Exchange Club members from Burlington, N. J.

Following the dinner session Paul Forster, president of the local club, and Frank Fabian, president of the Newtown unit, made brief remarks. Fabian told briefly of the renewed interest in the Newtown club since its re-organization about one year ago.

Introduction of guests at the dinner followed. Miss Gladys Rhoad, only woman guest present at the dinner was the first. Miss Rhoad, teacher at Bristol High School, later participated in the program of the evening. C. Quigley, another High School instructor, was also introduced. All the members of the Newtown Club were introduced as were the members from the Burlington Club.

The group adjourned to the auditorium following the dinner and engaged in group singing, led by Percy Ford. Doron Green then acted as chairman for the entertainment program which followed. Included on the program were the following numbers:

Mrs. Otto Grupp, Jr., Croydon, sang two numbers, both of which were enjoyed by the audience. "Jimmy" Salt, Newtown, presented some instrumental novelties, including the playing of a mouth organ, guitar and drum at the same time. Besides several songs which Salt sang he also presented a number with the violin and mouth organ at the same time, and another playing two mouth organs at the same time.

E. Carter, a member of the Rohm & Haas orchestra then favored with selections on the cello. Mr. Quigley, Bristol High School faculty member then sang several songs, accompanied by Miss Rhoad. This was followed by selections on the violin by Lester D. Thorne. Keith Rosser was the accompanist for Mr. Thorne as well as for several of the other entertainers. Miss E. Ramsey and C. Kyanian favored with selections on accordions.

The concluding number on the entertainment program was a series of performances by Arthur Brooks, Bristol magician.

At the close of the meeting an announcement was made that a representative from the University of Pennsylvania, Engineering Department, will speak on the subject, "Master Tools of Industry," at the meeting next Thursday evening.

IS LAST 89

With all the returns in and received, the epochal scientific argument over the swelled or not-swelled head may be considered closed. One side insists that the human cranium does get bigger as a person grows older, while the other side scoffs at all this, saying a man's head only looks bigger because styles change.

For the affirmative, the debate is led by Dr. Ales Hrdlicka and Sir Flinders Petrie, respectively noted American and British savants; the negative is valiantly defended by a famous hatter who bolsters his thesis by producing his voluminous and detailed files. He shows that Thomas A. Edison, the importance of whose head in any discussion no one can dispute, wore a 7 3/4 hat when he was a mere stripling and no larger a hat than a 7 1/4 in late life. Other figures produced from the firms' books show that never in adult life did Woodrow Wilson vary from a 7 1/4. Theodore Roosevelt, 7 3/4; U. S. Grant, 7 1/4; Calvin Coolidge, 7 3/4. The hatters refuse to give to an anxious public the size of lids worn by living personages, but if you are curious you may be happy to learn from observation of Washington correspondents that F. D. R. wears a 7 1/4.

The answer of the hatter to the statement that men's heads do get bigger is this: In general the human occiput and contiguous osseous structure remain the same size throughout maturity, but changing styles may enlarge the size of the head covering. American men today take a size larger than they did fifteen or twenty years ago, because the styles now dictate that the hat come to rest just above the ears, whereas it used to be worn nearer the top of the skull.

By such little things as the wispy breezes of fashion may even great scientists be humbled.

WITH ELBOWS ON TABLE

Stickers for etiquette, folks who are easily embarrassed by a faux pas in the parlor or at table, especially those who are all thumbs at sight of more than one fork beside the plate, may take heart from the news that Emily Post split most of her linguistic territory, and spent most of the hours of her presence at the famous Gournay Society's international dinner with her elbows on the table.

Mrs. Post, monitor supreme of social elegance, says she acted as she did to show that she was not a robot, but a human being, so that other human beings may take solace and know that their lapses from the strict rules laid down by Mrs. Post should not cause us too much woe.

The Gournay Society gathered in all the pheasants that could be found in New York and environs for the piece de resistance, which was breast of English pheasant in casserole with champagne, sauerkraut, and served to boot, a rare and lavish French dish, ragoût fin en coquille, Madame Pompadour flourish. It was a great occasion, but what makes it memorable was the presence and example of Mrs. Post.

Speaking from 40 years of experience, a Boston business man told a Senate committee, "You've got to take in more than you pay out." Though aroused, the committee said nothing.

The customary dissatisfaction is noted among the Deans. Dizzy is unhappy over a salary slash, and one in Memphis isn't touching his food.

The Great Game of Politics

fused, but that does not alter the fact that neither the President nor his friends thought so in July. Then they thought New York could not be carried without the Lehman candidacy. And when he yielded, the New Deal eulogies of his nobility of mind and character echoed to the skies. It was last summer that the tune changed. Then Governor Lehman, who is a deeply conscientious man, after long thought and after having personally expressed his views to drop his court-packing plan, made a public statement of his opposition. At once, Mr. Roosevelt's friendship, which had extended over years, changed to bitterness; and this was reflected in the violence of the attacks upon Governor Lehman by New Deal spokesmen and White House intimates, which is an additional evidence of the fact that Mr. Roosevelt has a very much deeper resentment toward his friends who disagree with him than toward his enemies. At any rate, so far as the White House is concerned, Governor Lehman has been in the doghouse since July, 1937, when he declared against the court bill.

THAT HE should now consider running for Governor again, when the President has planned to put his young White House favorite in his place, and the young White House favorite, not unnaturally, is thinking in terms of 1940, is a distinctly unpalatable dose. Perhaps Mr. Lehman, who two years ago was genuinely anxious to resume private life, will not run, but the printed reports that he is preparing to do so have not made life any lighter in what is known as the "inner circle."

"EXTRA FARE" by Edna Robb Webster

SYNOPSIS

Jaxie Cameron, lovely young newspaper columnist, travels west aboard the Big Chief, extra-fast train, in search of copy for "The Friendly Corner," column in the Chicago Star-Tribune. Tommy Ackerman, staff photographer, sees her off, taking a flashlight picture as Jaxie waves farewell from the observation platform. Inside Car 74X, Mose, the porter, is installing those who, for three dramatic days, are to be companions in the swift rush to the Coast. Among the passengers, Jaxie identifies a bride and groom, and notices a beautiful girl who is probably on her way to Hollywood. Carrie Dade, a tired-looking mother with two small children, instantly awakens Jaxie's sympathy. After the train leaves, the young columnist returns to the observation platform. On a sharp curve she almost loses her balance as she stands near the rail, but a tall, gray-eyed man grasps her arm as she sways precariously.

CHAPTER III

The stranger's eyes smiled friendly apology as he held Jaxie's arm firmly for a moment.

"I think you had better not stand at the railing," he said. "It is more dangerous there now, even, than when we get going faster out on the open road."

"But I might miss something," laughed Jaxie, and added, "Thank you for saving my balance."

"You must have a very good reason for wanting to get there so fast," he suggested.

"I have. So I can see all there is to see and hurry back again," she parried roughly.

Their amusement mingled pleasantly. "That certainly is a very good reason for hurrying away," he agreed.

"Doesn't it make you feel queer," she changed the subject, suddenly, with her eyes intent on the retreating distance, "slipping out of the city and leaving it behind like this? All the lights and silhouettes seem to be drawing back and falling away into space. It is they that are my mind instead of us."

"You put it in words very well. I'm one of those unfortunate people who feel things but can't express them."

"Be glad that you don't have to. It is one thing to feel an experience in your own thoughts and quite another to express it in words that will convey the same impression to others. But that happens to be what I have to do."

"A writer?"

"Yes—columnist. That's the worst line in the game. Searching out little precious bits of life and serving them up in appetizing ways for the hungry public that is too busy living to find life for itself."

"I can see that you do it very well—and like it," he observed with admiration.

"Of course, I adore it. But like most humans, I bite the hand that feeds me—make caustic remarks about the work I live by."

"Well, I've been devoting most of my caustic remarks to railroads in general and upper berths in particular. Can you imagine my climbing a ladder and folding myself into an upper?" His grin denied the force of his resentment.

"Then you must be in a hurry to get to the coast, yourself, if you prefer that discomfort to waiting for the next train," she suggested.

"It happens that I had no choice in the matter," he answered enigmatically, then remarked as he glanced about and noted that most of the passengers had gone inside.

"We may as well take these vacant chairs and be comfortable," he placed two of them at the best angle for the view. "May I ask what car you are in, Miss . . . ? My name is Elliott—Kirby Elliott."

"Cameron," supplied Jaxie. "In car 74X, next to this one."

"Why! So am I. That's fine. I'm delighted to meet you and hope we see a lot of each other in the next couple of days."

"We shall, probably. Neither of us can escape from the train since we are both in such a hurry to get to the coast," she reminded him.

"At least, we have that much in common, and perhaps we shall discover some other mutual interests."

"We may as well take these vacant chairs and be comfortable."

Again his eyes caught and held hers.

They were leaving the suburbs of the city behind now. Trees and gaudy open spaces flashed by them and melted into the distance, but Jaxie's interest in the landscape had waned for the time. Perhaps, she was thinking, her public would enjoy this bit of life and experience more than her impressions of the city fading into the night.

Mose was having his difficulties with the irascible old lady in lower 6, whose section Kirby Elliott shared. Mose had catalogued her instantly when she came aboard, one of the first arrivals. She had complained of the oppressive heat and closeness in the car.

"This right close in heat now, ma'am," he conceded. "But h'll be better when we all gets gone!"

"And when will that be?" she snapped.

"Well, it's purty early yet, ma'am. H'll be 'bout forty-five minutes for we-all pulls out."

"What? Forty-five minutes? Do you mean to say I'll have to sit in this stifling car for almost an hour?" She seemed to accuse Mose of delay with intent to exasperate, as if he were accountable for train schedules and their synchronization with the arrivals of all passengers.

"Ah's feared you-all will, ma'am." Mose shrugged aside all further responsibility in the matter.

"Well, open that other window and turn on the fans in this car," her words rapped a staccato command. "And bring me a pillow. Be sure it has a clean cover."

"Yes, ma'am. De fans is goin' already, but ah'll do everything else I kin to mak you-all comfort-ble," he assured her docilely, and ambled away, the busy last minutes of imminent departure not having arrived.

"Lawd-help-us!" he ejaculated to himself. "She gonna be mah Jonah!"

on his heah trip, ah sees dat. Why is it, dere always has to be one onnery one in ebery carload? Does seem 'sif sometimes when Fate shakes up a flock of people an' puts 'em togethab in de same Pullman cah foh tree days runnin', she'd sometimes pick a royal flush. But jes' seem lak tain't possible, nohow. Shake 'em up anyways you lah and deys always a onnery debil comes up, male or female." He forced a pillow into a clean case with expressive thrusts and finished it with a vicious punch.

In the passage he encountered another early arrival, obviously an inexperienced traveler, who was examining his whereabouts with bewilderment.

"Yes, suh! Kin ah help yoh, suh?" suggested Mose, reaching for a worn straw suitcase which appeared to be the man's only piece of baggage.

Its owner, however, had no intention of permitting other hands than his to handle his property. "Never you mind about my suitcase. I kin take keer o' that. Jist you show me where I-belong on this confounded train, and I'll be much obliged. I'm in the right car, ain't I?"

Mose glanced at the proffered ticket and turned about with alacrity. "Yes, suh, you is in de right cah, all right. Dis way, suh, in rumbah foah."

The old man's faded blue eyes, accustomed to the far horizons of the mid-west prairies, inspected with apprehension the cramped quarters assigned to him.

"But I thought—" he hesitated, and continued hurriedly at the porter's look of polite inquiry. "I thought there was to be a bed for the extry money. I could jist as well set up all the way—I done it more'n onc—but they insisted at the ticket office that I ought to have a bed."

"An' dat's jes' what you-all have got!" Mose was patient. He recognized an uninitiated traveler when he saw one, and exerted himself in his behalf. Wasn't it his duty to the railroad company to please new patrons, so they would want to travel more? Mose exercised his Christian training whenever it was possible.

So Mose explained to the skeptical old man something of the magic of Pullman seats that at his experienced touch became comfortable beds, and then bustled away to furnish duties that were increasing with the passing of minutes.

VANDEBURG RETAINS BAR SHOOT CONTEST

By Louis Tomlinson

For the second year in a row, Johnny Vandenberg, of the present Junior class at Bristol High outlasted all opposition in the annual Bar Shoot contest to retain the title which he won last year in that event. Johnny clinched himself on the horizontal high bar and "shot" over the bar on the standards at a height of eight feet four inches to equal the record he hung up last year in winning the honors.

In so doing, Vandenberg eliminated three other aspirants for the crown this year and became the second winner to copy the title twice and the first to win it two years in a row. This contest, unlike the rope shoot and ring shot which started in 1935, originated back in 1933 under the supervision of Coach Bill Dougherty in conjunction with the "gym" team which also laid its foundation that year. Therefore with a two-year jump on the other contests of like sort, the Bar Shoot in 1935 was the sixth annual event of its kind held by the gym team. This year, of course, it was held under the direction of Coach Steve Juenger.

The other entrants in the 1938 running for the title were two Freshmen and another Junior. The pair of "Freshies" were Gene McVaine and Tom Doyle, brother to Dick Doyle, who represented the other Junior in the event. Through the half of the girls' game, none of the contestants were eliminated as the bar was raised up to eight feet. The starting height was six feet, with the bar being raised two inches after each contestant hopped over the bar height successfully.

Starting at eight feet, during the half of the boys' game though, the entrants quickly terminated their chances to copy the title when each one went down in rapid succession.

Tom Doyle, of the Freshman Class, was the first to be eliminated when he missed the second round starting eight. Then Gene McVaine, also of the Freshman class, dropped out at the eight feet two inch height, and thereby leaving the Juniors to battle for the crown. But after Vandenberg had cleared the record height, Dick Doyle lost out when he failed to go over the bar after three unsuccessful attempts. In an effort to go higher than the record mark of 8.4, Vandenberg missed out but he had succeeded in defending and retaining his title. The two Freshmen who entered the contest for the first time went higher than the winning mark in both 1933 and 1934. The only other winner to take the honors for more than one year was Phil Carnvale who won it in 1933, the first year it was held, and again in 1935, which was the only other year he entered the contest.

Winners of other years in the B. H. S. Gym Team Bar Shoot Contest:

Year	Winner	Time won	Height
1933—Carnvale, 8th Grade			7:02
1934—Conti & Muffett, 9th Grade, 8th Grade			7:08
1935—Carnvale, Sophomore			8:02
1936—Hutchinson, Junior			8:02
1937—Vandenberg, Sophomore			8:04
1938—Vandenberg, Junior			8:04

The winner each year has either set a new record or tied the old mark. The mark set by Phil Carnvale in 1933 has now been raised 14 inches or one foot and two inches. The next year Joe Conti and Tommy Muffett topped Carnvale's mark by six inches, which is the highest mark over a previous record. When Carnvale again returned to the contest in 1935, he broke the mark set by Conti and Muffett by going up to 8:02, which mark Marvin Hutchinson tied in winning. Last year Vandenberg set a new mark at 8:04 and tied it in winning again this year.

"WEAPON" IN EACH HAND

TAUNTON, Mass. — (INS) — Most people are equipped with dangerous weapons according to a decision handed down in District Court here recently. The court ruled Frank Dutra, 43, had committed assault with a dangerous weapon when he hit one of two adversaries in a free-for-all. He was given a suspended three month sentence and a year's probation on the charge.

FALLS ELIMINATED FROM COURT TITLE

By Louis Tomlinson

TRENTON, N. J., Feb. 11.—Coach Jimmy Doherty's Orange and Black five from Fallsington High were definitely eliminated from all possibility of overtaking Bristol or Morrisville for the 1938 Lower Bucks County Basketball Championship when they were downed on the Junior High No. 4 court here last night by Morrisville to the tune of 42-26. As a matter of fact, they couldn't even tie either team if they won their last tilt from Bristol even if the leaders lost all the rest of their games. In such case, Morrisville would win out if the latter team won the rest of its games. While Fallsington was being eliminated as a result of their setback, the Bulldogs clung to the tails of the Bristol Bunnies when the Bulldogs hope to claw into submission when the two clash at Morrisville next Friday night.

PEMBROKE, Mass. — (INS) — Because youthful Fourth of July celebrators insisted on firing them off. Selectmen, in 1932, ordered four Civil War cannons buried. Now, as Melvin Shepherd remembered where they had been buried, W. P. A. workers have unearthed and placed them again by the Soldiers' Monument in Town Park.

BRISTOL HIGH TO MEET BENSLEM FIVE TONIGHT

Tonight the Bunnies will attempt to continue their clean slate record for he Lower Bucks County League when they clash with the fighting quintet from Southampton.

In the previous combat between these two teams the scoring was few and far between. This was mostly due to the smallness of the cage then used. The locals, however, conquering this obstacle, racked up 21 counters to Southampton's 14.

Coach Steve Juenger will probably start the same first five that brought victory in the seven previous league tilts.

Probable line-up:

Bristol		Southampton
De Luca	forward	Elmer
Gallagher	forward	Horton
Van Lenten	center	Strigel
Di Midio	right guard	Losse

BENSLEM WRESTLERS UPSET TRENTON OUTFIT

(By Louis Tomlinson)

CORNWELLS HEIGHTS, Feb. 11.—For the second time this season, Coach George Reimer's Bensalem Owl grapplers upset Trenton High's wrestling team, when the Blue and Gray tackled the Black and Gold in the Owls' home mat yesterday afternoon. The final count was 24-13, with the Trenton lads on the short end of the score. At Trenton, the Owls won by a margin of 15 points, 28-13. As a result of gaining this victory, the Owls notched their fourth triumph into their record slate for the year in five meets.

Again, as in the Cheltenham J. V. meet, it was the "heavy weights" of the Blue and Gray that swung the tide to Bensalem. And with the current flowing in the Owls' direction, they began to mount the score, thus the outcome became inevitable as the meet drew to a close. With the score tied away at 13 all, at the start of the seventh bout, the Owls finished the last three rounds in a sweep, gathering 11 more points to account for their 24 total.

The "big three" who came through to bring home the bacon were Frank Wharton in the 155-lb. class, Jack Scarborough in the 165-lb. class, and Horace Fisher in the 185-lb. class.

Summary of the meet:

- 95 lb. class: Jim Shapcott, Bensalem, won on a forfeit.
- Score: Bensalem, 5; Trenton, 0.
- 105 lb. class: Joe Faluk, Trenton, dropped George Flemming of Bensalem by using a half-nelson and crotch in 2:02 of the second extra period.
- Score: Bensalem, 5; Trenton, 5.
- 115 lb. class: Ed Yehle, Bensalem, threw Andrew Pukala, Trenton, in 6:03 on a half-nelson and arm lock.
- Score: Bensalem, 10; Trenton, 5.
- 125 lb. class: Pat White of Trenton won on a fall over Charlie Mudie, Bensalem, in 3:59, via a half-nelson and body press.
- Score: Bensalem, 10; Trenton, 10.
- 135 lb. class: Bob McGovern, Bensalem, gained a referee's decision over Charles Rosati of Trenton in two extra periods.
- Score: Bensalem, 13; Trenton, 13.
- 145 lb. class: Johnny Glodano, Trenton, scored a decision on Alex Deans of Bensalem.
- Score: Bensalem, 13; Trenton, 13.
- 155 lb. class: Frank Wharton, Bensalem, gained the nod over Pat Bellotti of Trenton.
- Score: Bensalem, 16; Trenton, 13.
- 165 lb. class: Jack Scarborough, Bensalem, won over Aaron Millman of Trenton on a referee's decision.
- Score: Bensalem, 19; Trenton, 13.
- 185 lb. class: Horace Fisher of Bensalem pinned Mike Girman of Trenton in 2:58 on a half-nelson and body press.
- Final Score: Bensalem, 24; Trenton, 13.

BRISTOL

Hollywood can boast one self-effacing young man who has risen to untold heights by the sheer force of his modesty, and his genial and unpretentious charm.

That young man is Gene Autry, cowboy extraordinaire, crooner de luxe, and yodeler supreme. For two years he has gone quietly on his way, making westerns for Republic, until suddenly he finds himself the object of a bewildering wave of fan popularity, with a vast volume of studio mail that exceeds Robert Taylor's in bulk, and an insistent demand on the part of his constituents that he appear more frequently and in pictures of the high budget class.

In response to this urgent plea, Republic has elevated the genial, modest cowboy to a prominent featured spot in "Manhattan Merry-Go-Round," which opens at the Bristol Theatre with a star-studded cast which includes Phil Regan, Ann Dvorak, Leo Carrillo, Henry Armetta, Jimmy Gleason, Cab Calloway, Tamara Geva, Luis Alberni, Ted Lewis, Kay Thompson and a host of others.

Gene doesn't forsake his chaps and his sombrero when he goes "high-brow." Far from it, he appears in the wild-and-woolliest of his western costumes, and turns in an outstanding contribution to the picture as the cowboy crooner who admits Phil Regan, heart-sick and defeated, into his hill-billy band. He introduces a brand-new song, "Round-up Time in

"THE WEE BONNIE HEATHER"

WOODSTOCK, Vt.—(INS)—A sight to warm the cockles of a Scot's heart is the heather blooming on Mt. Tom. The heather was brought here by a number of Scottish miners, who were imported to work an iron mine. With the exception of Nantucket Island this is the only spot in the United States where heather can be found growing.
